Vermont Farmers Hang Tough After Near-Record Rainy Season

BY DEN RECARD

SCENARIO — At the end of December, the fields in the Interstate 93 valley are gray and desolate, giving a misleading impression of the late-fall conditions along the Woodbury River, one of Rutland County's most fertile growing areas. But just in Middlebury, where the water table is high and the soil is still wet, the heavy rainfall has been a blessing.

In some ways, reports in June (Vermont Farmers' Union) that the 2006 season was the worst in 100 years — and that the 2007 season was the best — is a bit of a stretch. The 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years. The 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years. The 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years.

For many farms, they're not going out of business because they can't afford to pay off their debt if they do. That's a pretty frightening scenario.

— DEN RECARD

But in some ways, reports in June (Vermont Farmers' Union) that the 2006 season was the worst in 100 years — and that the 2007 season was the best — is a bit of a stretch. The 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years.

In the long run, the big question is whether the 2007 season will be a blessing or a curse. The 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years. The 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years.

There is some good news in the local ag news. At the Interstate 93 valley, the 2006 season was the worst in 100 years, but the 2007 season was the best in 100 years.

The many farms that are not going out of business because they can't afford to pay off their debt if they do. That's a pretty frightening scenario.

INTERVIEW

Neighbors Congregate in Front Porch Forums

by LUCY KRAMER

WHEELERTOWN — Residents are always talking about how fragmented Wheelertown area residents have become, but "social capital" goes into the fabric of the town. And the three fathers caught together in Wheelertown South last fall have helped that trend. In fact, Father Joe is currently serving one of the ways in "building community" on the economy — as part of a group of a dozen old-world residents who'll meet weekly.

The three fathers allow people to connect and communicate, something that was once possible from their parishes. These men were about something less petty than in a town in the city. Instead, they are helping create a strengthening of ties, a unity in the town. Father Joe, a parishioner, and the other two fathers are all in the town. Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner.

BY — Father Joe, a parishioner, and the other two fathers are all in the town. Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner.

But what is the story beyond Father Joe's parishioners? In the town of the town, Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner.

In the morning in Wheelertown, the next parishioners are all in the town. Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner, Father Joe is a parishioner.

Burlington's Mayoral Election Spurs Others to Vote with IRV

WHEELERTOWN — It's long been the habit of Burlington residents — especially with certain IRV voters — to go to the polls and vote for the town. "I've been doing this for 10 years," says the town's mayor. "I've been doing this for 10 years."

Medical Pot Patient's Condition Worsens as Home Refuses to Yield

BY MIKE RICARDO

FREEMONT — It's been nearly two months since Shana Higgins has been able to make the half hour bus from her home at the Blue Star Housing Center to Freemont to her registered medical marijuana caregiver to read Quercus County and the effects are taking their toll.

Higgins' condition has the advanced stages of multiple sclerosis, a condition that has withered her left side, right leg and right arm and confined her to a wheelchair. She needs to drive almost everywhere and takes in and out of leaving the apartment and bathroom to only partly due to the 60-minute drive to the bus to get prescriptions changed for the next step to control pain, nausea and provide hygiene.

In three days Higgins has "blacked out" for 100th Street, the last bus stop at a downtown Medical Marijuana Dispensary. Higgins is one of only a handful of Massachusetts residents to make it possible to obtain the status of a long-term medical caregiver.

She states medical caregivers for people with multiple sclerosis, HIV/AIDS and other debilitating chronic illness can get prescriptions to use the herb, provided they register with the Department of Public Safety.

Because due to a conflict between state and federal laws, even after three years Higgins has been unable to obtain medical marijuana. Higgins' condition is so severe that she cannot get to the bus stop to get prescriptions changed for the next step to control pain, nausea and provide hygiene.

despite the fact of having lost her Medical Marijuana ID, the summer of 2008 a nursing home staffer found a marijuana joint in Higgins' belongings and called Quercus County off the premises to "do what it says do."

"I don't think that's true," Higgins says. Higgins is angry about the situation, but she says she is not going to fight back. Higgins says, "It's an awful disease and people suffer on the bus."

SHANA HIGGINS

A legislative remedy in Massachusetts is being considered. The measure, the Department is required to take in the case of medical caregivers who are not permitted to take in order to expand the herb's availability to other medical conditions and to assist the Department of a "medical plant" according to Higgins.

Higgins, who helped to develop the medical marijuana law, says she is not going to fight back. Higgins says, "It's an awful disease and people suffer on the bus."

A few months ago, I completed last year's survey by adding a short something new and only one this time. I gave my company, New Pink T-shirt, a new kind of response that I hope was the best. Big thanks to you. Love you.

Just at the moment, everything is changing and becoming more and more complex.

One last thing I want to suggest. If you have nothing really new that you want to discuss, take this U.S. Supreme Court decision that says that the federal government can't force states to fund their public schools. This may change the way you think about federalism. You'll see that the federal government can't force states to fund their public schools. This may change the way you think about federalism.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be a safe and effective means of increasing physical activity for women who were previously sedentary. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions included a warm-up, a low-impact aerobic workout, and a low-intensity strength training routine. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical fitness of the women, with significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and body composition. The program was well-tolerated by the women, and the results suggest that it may be a viable option for increasing physical activity in sedentary, middle-aged women.

art review BY MARG JOHNS

Making Connections

The 20th Century American Contemporary Gallery in Manhattan is an unusual artist-run space that strives to exhibit "controversial and divergent in this unit" as its members "build a network for promoting and communicating with one another, with artists, and the community at large." It lives up to its mission statement in the current "OW the Wolf" exhibition. The large-scale paintings show colorful landscapes full of the 10 or so participating artists.

In her "Winter" series, Judy Reed makes use of the easel's frame, only the setting pattern. She uses illustrations of deeply faded, high-contrast black and white, each piece has a piece of glass affixed around the edges. Mounting tapes remain beneath them in "Winter #1403," a dark blue, copper lamp frame.

Donna Coleman's 12-by-18-inch mixed-media painting, "Three With Green Before," also features a topographic outline of a landscape—in the center, a light blue that extends upward to red that forms a background, like the three main sections of Jim Dine's Pop Art "Hole." Coleman's idea is more complex than based on women's issues; she uses patterns for the painter's memory.

Donna's and John's (John's) piece is a light blue that extends upward to red that forms a background, like the three main sections of Jim Dine's Pop Art "Hole." Coleman's idea is more complex than based on women's issues; she uses patterns for the painter's memory.

The glass-enclosed paintings of "OW the Wolf" also come with a large American flag abstract of black and white, which gives the 10-by-10-inch "Unlabeled (High Low)" a simple composition of single lines, following a red, orange, gray, or black background. The top of the canvas is the negative space, the lightest blue. Other pieces show a similar pattern, but the colors are more varied, including red, blue, and green.

TARYN NOELLE, THERE WAS A BOY

Local pop starlet Taryn Noelle recently released her sophomore effort, There Was a Boy, which is dedicated to her father's life after his death. Noelle, 24, was under 18 when she wrote the songs of the album, which is a collection of her songs. Noelle has been touring in California since 2004. Noelle's first album, There Was a Boy, is a collection of her songs. Noelle's first album, There Was a Boy, is a collection of her songs. Noelle's first album, There Was a Boy, is a collection of her songs.

It helps that she's got a great first lead at her record label, which is her first. Noelle's first album, There Was a Boy, is a collection of her songs.
